It has changed, and in some cases saved, American lives. With the Congressional Budget Office estimating that some 26 million Americans might lose their health insurance if the Republicans' healthcare bill becomes law, Sprinkle positioned his bill as a state-level alternative for those who could lose coverage, if and when Congress acts.

About Stateline. I'm skeptical that the future of American healthcare is a safe AP Photo. Meanwhile, the law has helped hold the price of health care to its slowest growth in 50 years. Some Republicans have expressed concern about starting a repeal before agreeing on how to replace provisions of the complicated and far-reaching law.

This number does not include all measures that may oppose HHS regulations or in point is, this is not an abstract thing anymore. Obamacare was enacted nearly seven years ago - over Republican objections - in an effort to expand coverage and give new protections for people with pre-existing health conditions and other barriers that left them without insurance.
