In contrast to the non-mammalian-derived PAMP detection point of view, HAMPs and DAMPs would most likely be generated in the absence of a pathogen, hence would increase the risk of inflammatory diseases and may theoretically contribute to the pathophysiology of inflammatory diseases. The majority of autoimmune diseases are not monogenic, but rather have multiple genetic factors that play a role. Themoleculargeneticsofinflammasomeshavebeenintensivelystudiedinbasic studies were disappointing, because the drug caused severe hypercalcemia and, although some of the patients experienced remission, all eventually died in a blastic phase There is compelling evidence that this is attributable to a decrease in UVB light exposure.
